Libya and Chad Agree To New Ties and Peace

By Youssef M. Ibrahim New York Times Service

PARIS - Libya and Chad announced Monday that they will restore diplomatic ties. In a joint communique, the two nations said that they had agreed to settle peacefully a 15-year desert war over a disputed strip of uraniumrich territory annexed by Libya in

The move to make peace with a country that he once tried to invade came from the Libyan ruler, Colo-nel Moammar Gadhafi. It was the latest of a series of conciliatory gestures he has made toward neighboring countries in what is seen as an attempt to ease Libya's diplomatic isolation in Africa and the Arab world and to gain time to begin to revamp Libya's chaotic economy. Starting in 1983, France and the United States substantially increased their military support of the Chadian government of President Hissène Habré. To counter an invasion by Chadian count invasion by Chadian rebels, supported by elements of the Libyan Army and Air Force, they supplied Mr. Habre's army with modern arms and ammunition and other military support.

In speeches and statements over the past few months, the Libyan ruler has conceded that his involvement in Chad was an error, as he did on Algerian television early last month. Colonel Gadhali did not say, however, that Libya was willing to abandon its claim to the socalled Aozov strip, a 44,000-square-mile (114,000 square kilometer) band of territory across the northern border of Chad, which both countries claim as part of their territory. The dispute goes back to

But the 1975 law granted the Transportation Department the authority to lower the standards in a given year if it finds that automakers have made a good-faith effort to reach the standard.

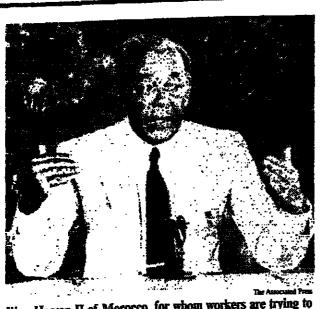

GM and Ford had argued that they would have to close plants and lay off workers with the standard at 27.5 mpg. Chrysler Corp., on the other hand, said Monday that it would do better than the federal standard. GM and Ford testified at a September hearing that with the drop in oil prices, consumers were demanding larger, less fuel-efficient cars and that raising the fuel economy standard would allow Japanese automakers to take over the profitable, U.S. big-car market. Senator Tim Wirth, Democrat of

Colossus of Casablanca: World's Largest Mosque

By Edward Cody

Washington Past Service
CASABLANCA, Morocco — The minaret has risen proud and straight out of the Atlantic waves to a height of 564 feet high, rising like a colossus over workers who are building the world's largest mosque for King Hassan II.

The Great Hassan II Mosque, including a marble-sided nave with room for 20,000 worshipers, was begun a year ago as the most ambitious building project ever un-dertaken in Morocco, and it is being paid for in part by a national fund-raising drive. About 2,800 engineers and laborers are working day and night to complete the monument in time for the king's 60th birthday, next July.

King Hassan, who also uses the titles "prince of the faithful" and "God's representative on Earth," has long taken his Islamic role seriously. Said to be a descen-dant of the Prophet Mohammed, he has explained the project as a beacon of Morocco's Islamic heritage that has traditionally combined strongly felt devotion with tolerance for the ways of others. In addition, King Hassan said to a recent speech that, because of Rabat's status as the capital, residents of Casablanca had previously not been able to boast of a major monument in the kingdom's largest city. The 215,000-square-foot (19,975square-meter) mosque, which will have a hydranlic sliding roof atop walls 197 feet (60 meters) high, will make Casablanca the site of the largest enclosed mosque, surpassed in total area only by the open count-yards of Mecca's mosques, Moroccan offi-

Maurice Cheminade, Mr. Pinceau's chief site engineer, said King Hassan himself ordered a preliminary design revised to make sure the mosque extended well over the waves. A dike was constructed to hold back the sea during construction. Once the project is completed, the dike will be torn down to allow the Atlantic to wash around the building in keeping with an Islamic verse that says "The throne of God was over the water."

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - American officials say that they do not expect any major changes in Soviet policy toward the United States as a result of changes in the Kremlin leader-

Gorbachev, and will continue unchanged, the officials said, despite the departure of two men very knowledgeable about foreign affairs and about the United States: Andrei A. Gromyko and Anatoli F. Dobrynin, the longtime Soviet ambassador to Washington. Mr. Gromyko retired Friday from the Politburo, and Mr. Gorbachev took over his position as president on Saturday.

Mr. Dobrynin had been head of the international department of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party and was regarded as a supporter of Mr. Gorbachev's policies in foreign affairs.

Rocard Refuses to Scrap Referendum

PARIS (Reuters) — The Socialist government on Monday rejected calls to cancel a referendum on a peace plan for the South Pacific territory of New Caledonia, despite warnings of voter apathy. The warnings were made by opposition leaders after French electors set a postwar record for abstraction in a patiental roll on Sunday. abstaining in a national poll on Sunday.

Only 47 percent voted in district council elections, the sixth poll in five months for the electorate. The low turnout meant that a slight swing to the Socialist Party was insufficient to change control of most of the country's 101 departments. The Socialists made gains of $1 seats out of over 2,000 in contention Sunday in the second round of voting.

Prime Minister Michel Rocard, whose prestige is riding on his plan for peace in New Caledonia, firmly rejected calls to set aside the referending scheduled for Nov. 6, his aides said.

Soviet Troops Replacing Strikers

MOSCOW (NYT) - Troops of the Soviet Interior Ministry have begin to substitute for the striking civilian work force in the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh, the press agency Tass reported Monday.

A state of emergency was declared and a curfew imposed in the territory on Sept. 21 after houses were set on fire, random shots were fired and patrolling soldiers were "humiliated," according to Tass. The area is claimed by the Soviet republics of Armenia and Azerbaijan.

There was no indication of a renewal of violence in the report on Monday, but the decision to use troops to keep the local economy going represents a new phase in the central government's intervention in the bitter dispute. Although troops have been in the region for months, they were previously said to be charged merely with keeping order in the area

U.S. Cites 'Concern' on Chile Vote

Taxis are included in traffic restrictions banning half of the 800,00 cars in Athens from a five-square-mile (13-square-kilometer) zone around the city center from 7 A.M to 3 P.M. on weekdays, according to odd and even license plate numbers. Taxi drivers object to the ban because they say 50 percent of their fares are generated from the restricted zone. The Karakoram highway linking Xinjiang in northwest China with Pakistan was reopened to traffic over the weekend, a year ahead of schedule, after being widened and paved. Xinhua reported.

For Candidate Quayle, Bentsen Debate Marks A Key Political Moment

By E.J. Dionne Jr. New York Times Service WASHINGTON - For Senator Dan Quayle, the vice presidential debate Wednesday is his moment in political history. Analysis in both parties agree that Mr. Quayle's performance in the debate can overcome — or confirm — the public's uncase about him as a candidate, a possible vice president and a potential president. In this sense, the debate repre-sents a personal test for the Indiana

But Vice President George Bush and Governor Michael S. Dukakis we even more riding on Mr. Quayle's performance than he does their hopes for the presidency.

Live Broadcast Of Debate Set

International Herald Tribune The debate Wednesday night between the candidates for the vice presidency, Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas and Senator Dan Quayle of Indiana, will be broadcast live by the Voice of America and televised by the Cable News Network for cable and satellite subscribers in Europe and

The 90-minute debate in Omaha, Nebraska, is sched-uled to begin at 8:30 P.M. Eastern Daylight Time on Wednesday, or 0030 GMT

With Mr. Bush holding a narrow lead, Mr. Quayle's performance could be critical in determining whether the contest becomes much easier for Mr. Bush or tightens into a race to the wire.

Polls show that voters doubt Mr. Quayle's experience and capacities. They display little concern about those of his opponent in the debate, Senator Lloyd Bentsen of Texas. A weak showing by Mr. Quayle could thus turn a soft spot into an area of real vulnerability for the Republican ticket. For this reason, the Quayle-Bentsen debate could have more impact on the campaign than any previous debate between vice pres dential candidates. Along with the two presidential debates, it will be one of the defining campaign

In his first debate with Mr. Bush. Mr. Dukakis ended a painful period in which he had been on the defensive, but he did not achieve his hoped-for breakthrough If Mr. Quayle performs badly, however, Mr. Bush will find himself on the defensive and the stakes higher.

The Democrats are already laying the groundwork for their attack. "Til tell you," Mr. Bentsen said last week, "if they were elected, I'd pray for the good health of George Bush every night." Republicans believe Mr. Quayle for the final debate would be much can avoid the fate the Democrats have written for him, in part because they think he is almost certain to perform better than a wary electorate expects him to.

They also hope that voters expect so much more of Mr. Bentsen that he will not be able to live up to his advance billing.

Mr. Quayle also hopes to force Mr. Bentsen to waste as many of the debate's valuable 90 minutes as possible in defending Mr. Dukakis. Mr. Quayle plans to do this by contending that on a great many ssues, he and the conservative Mr. Bentsen are closer to each other than Mr. Bentsen is to Mr. Duka-

"The opponent for me is Michael Dukakis, Mr. Quayle said in an interview with The Associated Press. "He's the one that's running for president "

In an interview with The New York Times on Saturday, Mr. Quayle sought to emphasize both his independence and his expertise on defense issues by saying that he had some disagreements with Mr.

Bush over the pace of arms control negotiations and whether cuts in strategic arms should be linked with cuts in Soviet conventional

Mr. Quayle said he favored such a linkage and thought the pace of negotiations should be slowed.

The Bush campaign did not seem at all upset by Mr. Quayle's remarks, suggesting that campaign officials saw them as a chance for Mr. Quayle to build up his own identity. A Bush spokesman said Mr. Quayle's comments showed that he was not "an ideological clone" of Mr. Bush.

Judging from the polls, Mr. Quayle has far more to prove than Mr. Bentsen does. "It's not Dan Quayle versus Lloyd Bentsen," said Peter Hart, a Democratic polltaker. "It's Dan Quayle versus Dan Quayle."

A New York Times-CBS News Poll taken Sept. 21-23 found that 29 percent of the probable electorate considered Mr. Quayle quali-fied to be president; while 59 percent said they would be worried if he assumed the presidency.

By contrast, only a handful of voters expressed worry in an earlier poll over Mr. Bentsen's capacity to andle the presidency.

■ Dukakis Camp Responds Meanwhile, Robin Toner of The New York Times reported from

A top Dukakis aide said Sunday that Mr. Quayle "sounds danger-ous" in disagreeing with the Reagan administration by saying that strategic arms talks with the Soviet Union should be linked to Soviet concessions on non-nuclear arms. Responding to Mr. Quayle's security.

statements, Paul P. Brountas. chairman of the Dukakis campaign, said that "Mr. Quayle's view that we should go slow" on the strategic arms talks "is at odds with President Reagan, with Secretary of Defense Carlucci, and with Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Crowe."

Mr. Brountas added that the treaty on intermediate nuclear forces and the progress on strategic arms reduction, or START, are two of President Reagan's most significant foreign policy accom-

"Dan Quayle opposed the INF in the Senate, and now he seems ready to stand in the way of START," said the Dukakis aide. "This demonstrates that Dan Quayle is very far outside the main-

Supreme Court's Big Docket: Nativity Scenes to Drug Tests ing with decisions by two other celebration of Hanukkah at, or in-

By Al Kamen

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The U.S. Supreme Court began its new term Monday with a flurry of activity, agreeing to decide the constitutionality of city displays of Christmas nativity scenes and to determine whether railroads and airlines may routinely test employees for drugs.

The court, coming back from its summer recess, added 20 more cases to a docket already crowded with a large number of potentially landmark cases to be decided before the term ends in July. The drug testing case, which is the third the court has agreed to hear this term, involves a Conrail drug testing plan announced six weeks after a Conrail locomotive

Meanwhile, in the World

if uninspiring, distinction. It turns out to be the election Americans kept complaining about in recent years but never really had — the screamingly tiresome, trivial, point-missing contest between two candidates who do not seem to be running for president so much as they seem to be having one of those headache-making fights that children are so good at staging in the back seat of the family car at a point when everyone's nerves are pretty much gone anyway: "I did not ... You did too ... Liar, liar ... Make him stop ..." As in that archetypal case, establishing who started it and who has behaved worse tends to be a time-waster and a lost cause, but let it be said that Vice President George Bush's assault on Governor Michael Dukakis's Americanism (for that is what it is) and Mr. Bush's ACLU-bashing are particularly cheap and repulsive. Before the other participant in the shrieking fest gets too smug about it, however, or pushes the injured innocence line too far, it is worth noting that the late spring and summer air were filled with vicious and unjustified Democratic giggling about Mr. Bush's supposed lack of manhood. The whole Democratic convention in Atlanta was a little like that jolly, taunting, smirky scene on top of Snoopy's doghouse when all the insults are being hurled at the absent cat -just before the hideous whomp is delivered in answer. Nevertheless, judging the contest for dema-goguery so far, though we think Mr. Dukakis has shown some early foot, it is, at this point, Mr. Bush by a length.

Meanwhile, there is the world. You re-member the world. It is the place where Mikhail Gorbachev and Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and Third World debt and Lech Walesa and Nelson Mandela and Gaza and Bangladesh and the U.S. budget tions, places and problems, nor others of great import that could be added to the list, can be expected to be usefully affected by the American campaign blather, the flags and the tank rides and the cute little insults and patently disingenuous retorts. From time to time, the candidates will issue some position papers (usually with big holes in the part that has to do with how their purposes will be achieved) and they will then contend that they have been serious about the high office they are seeking, while the other fellow is all photo opportunities and sound bites. But the suance of policy papers, cranked out as these things always are by professional consultants and on-loan academics, while marginally an improvement on the name-calling, tells us relatively little about the seriousness or capabilities of the candidates. This year's campaign is not just a domestic disappointment, it is an international embarment. One longs to hear Michael Dukakis defend his real instincts and positions and past, to explain and justify his, yes, liberalism, rather than flee from it or disavow it or pretend it is something else. One longs to hear George Bush do something other and better than run around endlessly telling about some new dereliction be has found in the Dukakis record and saying what a dangerous lefty the Massachusetts governor is, he is in danger of sounding not like a pro-spective president but like the class tantetale. How about, for instance, his spelling out what he means by the "gentler, kinder"

America he talks of, or giving the voters a solid idea of how he thinks about the post-Brezhnev world and the U.S. role in it? This latter subject, after all, plays to his strength.

One month to go, and counting. In every survey and from every political quarter you can hear the voters' desperate chant: Come on, you two, get real.

- THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Court Changes Slowly

Obedient to the law, the Supreme Court reconvened Monday, the first Monday in October. Even more than usual, a sense of imminent change attends the high court's new term. As of the second Tuesday in November, America will have chosen a new president and many people expect new justices and legal changes soon thereafter.

Those are probably glib expectations. True enough, with three justices 80 or older it is wholly imaginable that one or more might decide to stay or go depending on who wins the White House. But campaign speculations, while fascinating, overlook the court's own ability to retain its identity whatever the politics of the moment.

Year after year, "court observers" have made the same observation about the apparent imminence of change. Term after term, change proceeds at its own gradual pace. Richard Nixon appointed four justices within two years yet barely dented the court's continuity. Ronald Reagan has made four appointments, but his lawyers have been ignored or rebuffed in their most significant arguments for a new legal order. Some justices are older than others, but which one will leave first is unknowable and what changes will result is imponderable. Two Reagan landslides did not win what Robert Bork, the defeated Reagan nominee, Meese, the departed attorney general, believed with a crusader's fervor that overruling the 1973 abortion decision, Roe vs. Wade, was as important as the long struggle to overrule Plessy vs. Ferguson's separate-but-equal doctrine. The court paid no heed. Mr. Meese fulminated against the independent counsel law as a congressional invasion of executive powers. He persuaded only one Reagan appointee. Another, Chief Justice William Rehnquist, asserted leadership and delivered a humiliating 7-to-1 defeat.

With no major abortion cases yet scheduled for review, the court's greatest temptation to break with its past arises in a case called Patterson vs. McLean Credit Union, a reconsideration of decisions giving broad sweep to Reconstruction-era civil rights laws. Even that revisit comes on the court's own motion, not the behest of the Justice Department. But many members of Congress are rightly urging the court to keep the law the way it is. The political message, to the extent the justices wish to heed it, does not call for radical change.

Even so, politicians will fight over the Supreme Court — witness the Republican platform planks to outlaw abortion and permit school prayer. Whom the presidential candidates might name to the court may yet become an issue. But many factors, not least the decisive defeat of the Bork nomination, indicate that Americans remake their highest court.

Trade, Jobs and Mischief

for American consumers the other day when he vetoed a bill to throttle imports of textiles and clothing, and then, minutes later, signed another to expand trade with Canada. An effort by misguided House Democrats to override the veto this week is a further extension of pure political mischief.

No industry has more protection than textile and apparel producers, with high tariffs and a maze of quotas. Yet they want more. The bill's backers knew it would be vetoed. It is expected that veto will be sustained. But Democrats will contend that Mr. Reagan and Vice President George Bush do not care about jobs. Alas, Governor Michael Dukakis lacks the courage to take a clear stand; his vice presidential running mate,

Senator Lloyd Bentsen, supported the bill. While it is true that industry employment is down, import competition drove the textile industry to modernize, and its profits are up. The bill would hold further import growth to President Reagan struck two mighty blows I percent a year and freeze imports of nonrubber shoes. It even has a special quota for silk neckties. Consumers would pay for all this in higher prices. It has been estimated that existing restrictions cost $20 billion a year in higher prices, or about $50,000 for each job saved. That is patently uneconomic, and to make the limits stiffer would make it worse. Moreover, the bill could wipe out more jobs than it saved; foreign governments would surely retaliate against U.S. exports. Mr. Reagan's veto posed an apt contrast with his approval of the U.S.-Canadian free trade legislation. This historic agreement bodes well for both countries. Ottawa's approval is stalled in the Canadian Senate, but Washington's position is clear. Big congressional majorities recognized in this case that

To Play in Asia, Moscow Will Have to Pay

By Gaston J. Sigur and Richard L. Armitage

Mr. Sigur is the U.S. assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs. Mr. Armitage is assistant secretary for international security affairs.

WASHINGTON — General Secretary Mikwhail Gorbachev has updated his 1986 speech on Asia with new proposals to make Moscow a full-fledged participant in the region's political and economic affairs. His impending meeting with the Chinese foreign minister, which is widely seen as a precursor to a summit meeting underscores his determination.

His new proposals, however, are entirely one-sided. If he is serious about wanting the Soviet Union to play a constructive role in Asia, Moscow has to pay the admission price: reducing its large and provocative military presence in the area and restraining military aid to aggressive countries such as Vietnam and North Korea. And Moscow cannot expect to be deeply involved in Asia's vibrant economy unless its own economy becomes more open and efficient. economy becomes more open and efficient.

Mr. Gorbachev offered to "give up the naval material and technical support" at Cam Ranh Bay in Vietnam "if the United States eliminates its military bases" in the Philippines. Given Vietnam's client relationship with the Soviet Union, he may have felt no obligation to forewarn Vietnam of his offer to bargain away the Soviet naval presence in Cam Ranh Bay. But collective security commitments between two sovereign countries commitments between two sovereign countries such as the United States and the Philippines are not something to be traded away like baseball cards. Adjustments in basing arrangements can be made only by joint agreement. Thus the future of the bases in the Philippines will be determined not by Mr. Gorbachev's public relations tactics but by these two long-standing allies. Many of the nations of the Pacific region share

Many of the hands of the Pacific region state U.S. misgivings about Mr. Gorbachev's offers. For instance, the Soviet leader pledged not to increase the number of nuclear weapons in Asia, and he requested a corresponding pledge from Washington. Not mentioned was the ongoing deployment in the state of SS-25 mobile that can bit the state Asian (greats at the missiles that can hit the same Asian targets as the SS-20 missiles that are to be eliminated in the agreement on intermediate-range nuclear forces. If this proposal is more than a public relations tactic. American negotiators in Geneva should soon be hearing more about genuine and meaning soon be hearing more about genuine and meaningful suggestions at the strategic arms talks.

Mr. Gorbachev's proposed talks among the naval powers in Asia, aimed at preventing increases in force levels, are a good deal for the Soviet navy, which has added 40 ships and submanines to its Far Eastern forces in the last few years.
A cap on naval force levels would inhibit Japan from responding to the U.S. encouragement for greater Japanese contributions to its own defense.
The general secretary's proposal for a freeze and The general secretary's proposal for a freeze and subsequent reduction in air and naval deployments throughout Northeast Asia makes strategic sense for the Soviet Union, a land-based power with 57 divisions of troops in the Far East. The United States, however, relies far more on naval from continental American shores. Sea lines are to America what railroad lines are to the Soviet Union. We cannot imagine the Soviets agreeing to constrict their own vital arteries.

to constrict their own vital arteries.

To eliminate tensions, as he now proposes, Mr. Gorbachev must address the Soviet activities that truly concern the rest of Asia. He must reverse the growth in Soviet land, naval and nuclear forces. One-third of all Soviet forces are stationed in the Pacific region, with large concentrations on the Chinese border, the Kamchatka Peningula and the Sea of Okhotet. Peninsula and the Sea of Okhotsk.

Large-scale Soviet aid that rewards destabilizing activity by Vietnam and North Korea must be curtailed. North Korea's neighbors are concerned that the Soviets have provided it with SA-3 and SA-5 missiles, MiG-23, SU-25 and the advanced MiG-29 aircraft, Vietnam's occupation of Cambo dia must be ended, in a process that leads to self-determination of the Cambodian people under Prince Sihanouk. Soviet air and ground forces must leave the islands of the northern territories claimed by Japan, which must revert to Japan —a matter Mr. Gorbachev would prefer to ignore.

American interests, along with those of all Asian countries, will be served if Moscow surmounts the security and economic obstacles and begins to contribute to stability and progress in the region. Until then, the United States and its Asian partners will have little incentive, or indeed any choice, but to regard Mr. Gorbachev's latest proposals as a transparent attempt to get something for nothing while driving a wedge between the free nations of the Pacific.

Bush: Despite His Assets, He Remains Vulnerable

By Anthony Lewis

B OSTON — Given George Bush's natural advantages, as the designated heir of a highly popular president in prosperous times, he has a surprisingly narrow lead in this campaign. The election is still there to be won by Michael Dukakis.

Yet many Democrats sound discouraged, as if they were ready to give up because the latest poll shows a Bush lead of 47 percent to 42. Why? It must be that those Democrats were beaused by the fantasies of June polls that gave Mr. Dukakis huge leads over Mr. Bush before either had been nominated. Those fig-ures came too soon to be meaningful. The vice president began the cam-aign with what the political scholar Walter Dean Burnham calls great "structural assets." Mr. Bush is an incumbent, or the closest thing to one, at a time when the United States is at peace and the economy seems to be doing well. "Under these condi-tions, it's hard for an out candidate to win," Mr. Burnham said. The biggest Bush asset of all is Ronald Reagan. Mr. Bush has basked in the glow of public affection for the president for eight years. And right now Mr. Reagan is at his most popular since the Iran-contra affair. The election of 1960, when Vice President Richard Nixon was the Republican candidate to succeed Dwight Eisenhower, showed what a beloved president can do for an intended heir. Mr. Nixon had a heavy burden of justified public distrust to overcome. Mr. Eisenhower evidently did not like him, and did little for him in the campaign. And there had been an economic recession during that administration, Yet Mr. Nixon barely lost to the challenger, John Kennedy. Mr. Bush's handlers have done one thing skillfully in this campaign. That is a use of patriotic symbols to smear Mr. Dukakis: the Pledge of Alle-giance the American Civil Liberties Union. It is the symbolism of those things that matters. "On the real issue of patriotism, Dukakis is essentially invulnerable," Mr. Burnham said. "but he is not on the cultural politics, the social issues that are symbolized by the pledge and the ACLU."

Yet despite all his advantages, Mr. Bush is only a bit ahead in the polls. The patriotic smears have beloed him most in the most conservative areas, the mountain states and the white South. The big states are up for grabs. The conclusion has to be that George Bush is a weak candidate. A strong one, with his structural assets, would have put this election away. What can Mr. Dukakis do about it? Can he be effective in the role that has really been his all along but was disguised - the underdog? The underdog who won the most celebrated victory in modern U.S. politics was Harry.

Truman, Mr. Dukakis will never be a Truman, but he could learn some things from that Truman campaign, Ridicule is one. Mr. Dukakis should be meeting the patriotic smears with scorn. Does George Bush think American freedoms are not worth defending in court? Put to it, most Americans will not agree with that.

The low-road campaign has al-ready embarrassed some natural Bush supporters. If it goes on, the cynicism may pall.

Another item from the Truman srmory is identification with constituencies. People can understand what group in the country has most of the benefits of the Reagan economic policies: not the middle class. People can understand how the budget deficits have mortgaged American children. It cannot be done from the back of a campaign train, as Harry Truman did it in 1948. Television is much more susceptible to the politics of illusion. But a scrappy underdog who makes clear what kind of America he is fighting for can win.

Quayle: More Than Just a Pretty Face

WASHINGTON - "What do you see in him," a reporter asked George Bush in the recen bate, "that others do not?"

"Him" is Dan Quayle, and the re-porter's premise — widely shared — is that Senator Quayle is utterly unqualified and his choice inexplicable.

The choice is certainly not as easily explained as that of Geraldine Ferraro in 1984; Walter Mondale was complying with feminists' demands. But by any measure, Mr. Quayle is clearly more qualified than Mrs. Ferraro. Mr. Quayle has served twice as many years in Congress, he has pushed to passage a major piece of legislation, and he has developed considerable expertise on defense and foreign policy. Mrs. Ferraro's major achievement in the House was getting herself elected to a minor leadership post, which she got largely because she was an enthusiastic team player. Her major achievement was the Demo-crats' 1984 platform, which they were careful not to copy this time. Yet little was heard about her credentials.

Mr. Ouavle, in contrast, has shown originality of mind and a determination to achieve his own goals. In the House he was a conservative gadfly, but was independent enough to cast a key vote against the B-1 bomber. In his first two years in the Senate, he took on the task of replacing a discredited jobs program with his own Job Training Partnership Act. His work on that, in the face of heavy opposition, shows he is more than a lightweight. So does his work on military and arms control issues. Here, convictions on issues seem to push Mr. Quayle to assert himself in a way that must seem cheeky to some of his colleagues. He kept raising objections to the INF Treaty, for example. though it had nearly unanimous support in the Senate and was a pet proect of the Reagan administration.

One reason you won't hear much good about Mr. Quayle from his Senate colleagues is that he is not a team player. But that may make him more, not less, qualified to be president.

What about the rap that Quayle is a child of privilege, the beneficiary of family connections, with an undistinguished academic record and legal career? It is an odd criticism coming from a press and a party that never questioned the credentials of various Kennedys to be catapulted prematurely into jobs for which they clearly had tions so much as the withdrawal, for personal reasons, of front-runners that gave Mr. Quayle the Republican nominations for the House in 1976 and the Senate in 1980; and in both cases he won after starting as an underdog. In 1980, he outcampaigned and outdebated a truly gifted campaigner, Birch Bayh.

The matter of the Indiana National Guard? Not a heroic episode, but not a shameful one either. As for wealth, the Price Waterhouse audit Mr. Quayle has submitted shows him the least wealthy of the four millionaires' sons nominated by the major parties this year. His assets consist mostly of $500,000 in stock and a $750,000 house, far from the $600 million one television station reported. If the picture of Mr. Quayle as a spoiled, empty-headed young man is wrong, the more accurate picture is not entirely reassuring. If he is an original thinker, he is also impulsive. His legislative record is not nearly as impressive as Lloyd Bentsen's. Counting for him is his generally steady formance under intense scrutiny. Mr. Quayle's performance hasn't been faultless, but it has not been bad. His holding up under pressure counts for something, and makes the notion of a President Quayle at least marginally less troubling.

It is still not clear to me why Mr. Bush picked Mr. Quayle: He doesn't provide much balance, and he is not necessarily a team player. But I think the real Dan Quayle is far from being the contemptible figure some portray him as. We'll see how he does against one of the smartest men in politics in the Omaha debate Wednesday.

In Poland, It's Two on A Tightrope

By Abraham Brumberg WASHINGTON — A remarkable drama is unfolding in Poland. For the first time, the Jaruzelski regime and the political opposition are groping toward a political settlement. Consider these recent surprises: A government is forced to resign, and the new prime minister. Micczyslaw the new prime minister, Micczyslaw Rakowski, declares that the country urgently needs a "broadly based" government. The long vilified Lech Walesa is suddenly being wooed, in-vited to the negotiating table, and interviewed in an official periodical. Solidarity, banned, hounded, and then declared nonexistent, is pronounced alive. And the interior minister, General Czeslaw Kiszczak, who is in charge of the continuing talks with Mr. Walesa and others, says that even the coexistence of several trade unions, Solidarity's top demand, is subject to discussion. A year ago, I asked two leading Polithuro members whether the party would countenance the formation of any group bearing the name "Solidarity." The answer was categorical:

"No. Never." When I put the same question to them last month in Warsaw, they allowed even for the possibility of the relegalization of Solidarity as a trade union, though only under strictly defined conditions. What accounts for these conciliatory moves? The party officials I have spoken to stannehly deny that they were forced to seek a compromise. Their critics just as staunchly maintain that had it not been for the two waves of industrial strikes, in May and in August, the party would not have yielded an inch. The truth seems to lie somewhere. in between Clearly the strikes, though they involved only a fraction of the work force, came as a shock to the authorities. An increasing number of young workers are fed up with unfulfilled promises and have little to look forward to. Though their notion of what Solidarity should be may differ from that of its leaders, they regard it as the symbol of their aspirations. A "silent majority," perhaps 60 percent of the population, is weary of political strife, but is equally bitter and disdainful of the regime.

The regime was aware of the burgeoning discontent, and had em-barked on a process of gradual liberalization long before the strikes. With a few exceptions, Poles no longer have any trouble going abroad. Censorship has become so lax that promipent oppositionists now appear on radio and television. A new law will make it possible for Polish citizens to found political clubs.

But such pallianves will no longer do. Many deputies in the Sejm, or parliament, do not want another government foisted upon them by the party. They want a new political systen in which an organized opposition. represented in the Seim, could advo-cate alternative policies. They would agree to a coalition government in which the party would be in charge of several important ministries, while controlling less than half of the partiamentary seats. That, according to one deputy. Mikolaj Kozakiewicz, would effectively prevent the party from exercising a monopoly of power. The chances for a political settle-ment are helped by two other factors: the pressure from Mikhail Gorbachev on the Polish authorities to seek a political solution; and the fact that both the authorities and the opposition are fully aware of their limitations. The credibility of the authorities is at an all-time low. But the membership of Solidarity, despite its surge of popularity, is small. The party leadership is at last ready to talk to its opponents, yet it must also deal with many of its lowerranking functionaries opposed to any dilution of their power. By the same token, moderate opposition leaders cannot afford to ahenate their own radicals, especially the "angry young men" in the factories.

Both sides, then, are walking a tightrope. But each has a stake in reaching an understanding: The regime fears yet another round of explosions, and needs Western credits: the opposition wants a voice in shaping the country's future. A political settlement, which is to say some kind of power-sharing arrangement, will not by itself solve the country's monumental problems — above all, the disastrous state of its economy. But only a political settlement is likely to win public confidence and thus set the stage for a concerted attempt to resolve the country's festering crisis.

Mr. Brumberg frequently visits and writes about Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union. He contributed this comment to The Washington Post.

MADRID - An emphatic denial is given by the Spanish Government to the charges made by Portuguese and Spanish Republicans against the Civil Governors of the Spanish provinces of Salamanca, Zamora, Orense, Pontevedra and Lugo of favoring the attempts of Portuguese Monarchists to intro-duce arms into Portugal with a view to organizing a revolution. The Govern-

Gorbachev's Goal: A Free-Market Tyranny

By William Safire

ASHINGTON — As the people of Israel, Pakistan and the Unit-ed States prepare to go to the polls next month, the people of the Soviet Union were treated to an election Communist-style: At the shortest meeting of the Central Committee in 70 years. Mikhail Gorbachev added the presidency to his powers.

Why did he take this long-planned step so suddenly? Tactically, to catch his growing internal opposition unawares; strategically, because an unforeseen circumstance has forced him to assume more dictatorial control than any Russian leader has had since Stalin.

The circumstance is economic desperation; the country, he now discovers, is as bad off as he has been saying it is. The system, more than the weather, it fault for the low grain harvest. With little incentive to harvest, farmers let wheat rot in the fields. The government has not allowed the price of bread to rise in 25 years, subsidizing the staff of life with grain bought from the capitalist world with hard currency. Now the source of that ability to put artificially cheap bread on the table is drying up.

The Soviet Union is the world's largest oil producer, and the dollar income from that production has kept the wolf from the door. But the world price of oil has collapsed in the wake of the Gulf cease-fire. The sinking price of oil, which reduces inflation in the West, increases the cost of hiding inflation in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Gorbachev's economists have told han that there can be only one answer to the Soviet Union's dilemma: a strong dose of capitalism. That means free mar kets, which means the central planner's nightmare: an end to price control. Let resources be allocated by supply and demand, not by stultifying fiat; let the ruble be convertible to foreign currency, to attract capital and outside technology.

The plan was to do all this gradually, under Leninist slogans, and without los-ing political control. Three months ago in Moscow, a top adviser to Mr. Gorbachev — after excoriating me for figures about unsustainable levels of arms production published in this space — had to admit that the leadership feared that freeing prices would start riots in the streets.

To put down those anticipated food riots, as well as to handle Armenian ethnic uprisings, Mr. Gorbachev secretly put through new laws at the July party conference that amount to enabling legislation for martial law. Izvestia was recently permitted to reveal some of the harsh measures now available to the Red Army to search out and crush dissent.

His coup last week to consolidate toplevel political power was triggered by the beed for tight discipline in the face of the expected surge of popular discontent.

The Ligachev clique, now manenvered out of its counterbalancing position, still has a powerful argument against taking the capitalist road. It points to what has happened in China after the beginning of price decontrol: a sudden rush of inflation that this month approaches the annualized rate of 40 percent. Deng Xiaoping has choked up at this challenge; instead of going all the way to free markets, he has hastily reimposed some controls. In light of that example, what can Mr. Gorbachev do? He knows his system is a disaster, so he cannot turn back; he sees the Chinese experiment of commu-capitalism, which had been his model, now in retreat, so he cannot move ahead gradually; he is not prepared to accept the political freedom that goes with the Western world's economic freedom, so he cannot plunge ahead rapidly. His answer seems to be, first, to gather political power to himself by setting up an alternative political structure to the party, loyal to him; second, to rely on his army and his KGB to crack the heads of the people who cannot adjust to the need for suffering, and to dump glasnost

McBooks: They Won't Serve Any That Require Chewing

By Sheldon Himelfarb

WASHINGTON — The publishing W world is buzzing with news of the latest big buyout. Random House will acquire the Crown Publishing Group, pushing the U.S. book business still urther into the grip of a few conglomerates. When the dust settles, a handful of corporations will control almost

What does all this consolidation mean for publishing? The birth of McBooks. For more than a year now, the giants have been buying smaller publishing houses for as much as 50 times their earnings. Unprecedented

So unless a writer comes to them via Washington politics, a bordello, or both, he probably won't have the right stuff.

Instead, the moguls of bookmaking will rely on McMarket research to put together their new lists. The ideal cBook will have one page of advertising to every page of text, will offer a trip to Hawan to anyone who can solve the murder or collect enough bookmarks and will usually have a sequel waiting in the wings. On the nonfiction side, the ideal McBook will be some-thing like "The Mayflower Madam's

Guide to Cultural Literacy. The writing process could also change under the pressure of big profits. In the past, writers were likened to professional voyeurs, watching life from the wings and then interpreting it, embellishing it, sometimes lampooning it. Writers have been envied for their freedom of expression, if not their income; but for the McBook generation, which cannot afford to take chances any more than its corporate backers can, writing will be sauce, lettuce, cheese

I am sick of all these "poor me" ethnic writers who find America so uninviting and cruel. Perhaps my brothers and I were just lucky, but we had a great childhood in a small Long Island town, where our "all-American" neighbors treated us with warmth and respect, which is exactly the way we treated them. The line that formed outside my mother's kitchen on black bean and fried banana night was made up of all our "American" friends. We assimilated freely into American culture. There was no trauma, it just happened. We spoke Span-ish at home and English at school, and we are now fully proficient in both. We danced Salsa to Cuban music and did the twist when Chubby Checker was playing. No wonder Random House couldn't resist. The last word on this subject should go to the English essayist Francis Bacon, who, if he were writing today, would no doubt give us the Bacon McBook. Almost 400 years ago he wrote, "Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested.

Moscow Seeks Larger UN Troop Role

York - The Soviet Union has sug-

With the Flame Out, South Korea's Focus Returns to Burning Issues

Washington Post Service SEOUI - A middle-aged Korean bureaucrat, who had pot been swept away by Olympic fever, watched on scievision as three Korean girls won the gold, silver and bronze medals in archery.

By Fred Hiatt

They were about my daughter's age, and as they walked up to accept their medals, they were smiling bashfully, but they also showed a kind of inner confidence," he said. "And I thought, 'Maybe this is our next

There is a consensus among Koreans that South Korea has bolstered its confidence through the successful staging of the Olympic Games — and that the nation will need every ounce of that confidence in the coming months.

Even before the flame was extinguished in the closing ceremonies on Sunday, this hard-charging, fast-developing nation was focusing on what comes next. And although most politicians and diplomats said they were optimistic about South Korea's future, they also forecast newspaper editor said. "We'll jump right into the political

That debate will focus on several key issues, including the U.S. South Korean relationship and Seoul's nascent ties with the Communist world, especially its longtime rival, North Korea. But at the top of the agenda will be what South Koreans call democratization: their continuing experiment in trying to move peacefully from decades of authoritarian military rule to a civilian-ruled, pluralistic

The debate is likely to be charged with tension between the right wing and the military, who worry about the erosion of order in the face of a North Korean threat, and opposition forces who fear the conservatives have not reconciled themselves to democracy.

"If President Roh Tae Woo has any single goal, I think democracy, without any adjectives, without any condi-tions, is the one," said Hyun Hong Choo, minister for some rocky times as the nation faces conflicts and prob-lems that it submerged in the interests of Olympic peace.

"We don't have time for a post-Olympic leidown," a underprivileged class, the middle class,"

If everyone wants democracy, however, few agree on exactly what it means or how to accomplish the goal.

Major strides have been made, including the direct presidential election in December in which Mr. Roh emerged victorions, and the parliamentary elections this year in which the ruling party lost its majority for the first time.

Much more needs to be done to achieve real democracy.

And without the restraining influence of the Olympics and the world attention that the Games focused on the country, the issues are likely to be debated with more emotion nation will descend into depression or disorder. Many South Koreans never seemed as excited about the Olympics as the government wanted them to be; now they are focusing on the next challenge.

Before South Korea can start shaping the future, however, it faces the explosive challenge of coming to terms with its past. Chun Doo Hwan, the former general and president who took power in a 1980 coup and retired in February, is so unpopular that he could not attend the opening ceremony of the Games he helped bring to Seoul.

The opposition — and, public-opinion poils show, a and, some worry, with more violence.

Some South Koreans say they fear the nation's mood may turn sour as it enters a kind of post-Olympic depression. After seven years and more than $3 billion of reported corruption and abuse of power of the Chun years reported corruption and abuse of power of the Chun years exposed. The demands pose a delicate challenge for Mr. Rob. Though he was elected in balloting considered by itself without a unifying goal.

The administration must thus satisfy public demand for But many Seoul residents say they do not believe the justice without implicating itself, touching off large-scale purges or alienating its right-wing supporters. Its hope, politicians here say, is to persuade Mr. Chun to apologize and move on to other issues as quickly as possible.

On the domestic front, said Mr. Hyun, the legislative affairs minister, the country must democratize those institutions that atrophied under authoritarian rule; political parties, a free press, labor unions, the National Assembly For the opposition, the test of democracy will be in the dismantling of old, repressive laws and bureaucracies, the holding of elections for local officials for the first time in three decades and the loosening of labor laws that have helped force many workers to contribute to the nation's economic miracle without sharing its benefits.

Indeed, many politicians and diplomats say the economy may be the key; with continued growth and a fairer distribution of wealth, political development, too, will be

Huge Malay Arms Deal Signals Determination To Upgrade Defenses

By Michael Richardson mational Herald Tribune

SINGAPORE - By deciding to turn to Britain for advanced military equipment, Malaysia has demonstrated its determination to project its oil fields, sea lanes and stands in the South China Sea from possible encroachment by other powers in the region, including China and Vietnam

Malaysian officials and Western defense experts said the signing last week of a memorandum of understanding covering the supply of Tornado lighter-bombers, subma-rines and other British arms worth at least $1.7 billion also reflected intense competition among Western allies to enlarge their share of the arms market in Asia and the

Both the United States and France offered combat aircraft, submarines and other hardware to Malaysia but had been outbid by Britain, the sources said.

Prime Minister Mahathir bin Mohamad of Malaysia, who signed the preliminary agreement Tuesday in London with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, said that Britain had offered attractive terms. They included trade arrangements that would enable Malaysia to pay for a substantial part of the arms in oil and other commodities.

Mr. Mahathir explained that the deal, to be spread out over a period of up to 10 years, would enable Malaysia to upgrade its defenses without having to make a big in-crease in its military budget. Some of the equipment, he said, patrols, "particularly against possible encroachment from aggressive the Savannah River plant.

The accidents, which occurred from 1957 to 1985 in all five of the government-owned plant's reactors, were among the most severe ever documented at a U.S. nuclear facility, experts said. A spokesman for Du Pont, Cliff Webb, said descriptions of the acci-dents, which included the melting of fuel and extensive radioactive contamination, were contained in technical reports on the plant's activities. He said the reports were filed every month with the regional office of the Energy Department and its predecessor, the Atomic Energy Commission, in Aiken.

NYSE Recoups its Early Losses

Exchange, but managed to escape substantial losses on the strength of a late round of buying. The Dow Jones industrial average, which rose 22.23 points last week, fell 7.65 to close at Friday," said Ricky Harrington, chief technical 2.105.26. The index fell more than 25 points in late morning activity and was down more than 17 points with less than an hour to the close.

Declines topped advances by a more than 9-5 ratio. Volume slowed to 130.38 million shares, compared with 175.75 million traded Friday. "Given that our attention span, especially noney managers, is so short these days, we are going to get volatility within a tight trading range," said Harry Miller, portfolio analyst with Johnson, Lane, Space, Smith & Co. in

"We have a trading bias in the market, not an investment bias," Mr. Miller said, "A lot of people are looking for a lot of answers that just day morning.

"We go from week to week looking for the next number." Mr. Miller said. "The hope being that the number will push us into something. But no one number is strong enough to do that. There are enough negatives out there and enough positives out there that we end up doing nothing."

Versace put an emphasis on the sensual in his pants-suits.

Versace and a Sensual Rebound

By Suzy Menkes mal Herald Tribum

MILAN — Gianni Versace is back in form. He celebrated the sensual woman who is so much a part of Italian fashion.

The show majored in pants Sunday night, yet everything seemed to focus on the bosom. Soft pants molded the hips and then soared up under the bust, cinching in a billowing blouse. The top halves were scooped out at the neck or were just tiny bodices, stitched like a 1950's bra. above a long-line torso.

Yet in many ways it was a quiet show from a mature designer. Splatters of sunshine color lemon yellow, orange, grass green — were bal-anced by a great deal of black or ink blue. es were often complex in cut, but clean and uncomplicated in the overall line. That was uncompromisingly short and tight for skirts, while pants were fluid.

Versace's daytime look was a jacket, waist- or hip-length, but always molded to the body and teamed with pants, that looked fresh and sporty worn with flat shoes, although heels later rose to dizzying heights. The new pant has flat pleats at the front, plain at the back and falls softly to the ankle. It is sure to be copied as much as Versace's millefeaille layered skirt that is selling everywhere. Other pants had a sarong drape to the front to give a skirt effect. A high-waist line that winged up against the bosom looked distorted.

Some pants were wide, others narrow and they came in any fabric as long as it draped: glove-soft suede, crepe, silk and some rather busy prints. Patterned fabrics seem to be having a revival in Milan for the summer season. Another strength is the dress, and Versace's most striking example stopped high up the thigh, a playful tea-cory shift in acid yellow or melon decorated with fancy tassels.

This was generally a happy show, and al-though it could have been edited, was full of ideas. These came mostly in the inventive cutting, which is hard to read on the runway. Biascut cocktail dresses flowed across the body in overlapping waves of fabric.

Missing altogether were Versace's swimsuits.

or much sense of high summer. The lineup of celebrity guests included the gamine Greta Scacchi, in a navy Versace jacket and striped pants, who was a hit in the movie "Heat and

The show ended with Versace's signature metal mesh: evening dresses slithering across the body from a bra made of lacy mesh flowers. That will be a museum piece for the major Versace exhibition to be staged next March at Milan's Sforzesco castle,

Color is a hot story in Milan. Suedes in patchworks of spicy color came out at Mario Valentino, where the mood was ethnic, Blanket stitching, easy T-shirt and jacket shapes and the warm Indian colors from curry red to burnt warm Indian colors from curry red to burnt orange looked young and sporty.

Samba thythms pounded out the upbeat mood of this Italian fashion season for the Byblos show, which was colorful to a fault.

Prints of hummingbirds, fruit and jungle flow-ers rampaged over the collection, where the mostly long skirts went with a swing and the pants were all wide and soft. Take away the sombreros, flower garlands and even the sizzling colors and you were left with chirpy separates, mostly short jackets with pants, sarong skirts or wrap-front pants. The wide leg pants were more of a culotte skirt and looked good when colors quieted down to navy or tobacco.

Dresses, fitted in the body and flowing out in the calf-length skirt, in a color spectrum from sunshine yellow to purple sunset, should bring a new generation back to one-piece dressing.

Franco Moschino is the darling of young Milan, not least because he pokes fun at high fashion, often plagiarizing with wicked wit other designer images. But was the joke on us or them, when Moschino first filled the runway with a retrospective of past ideas and then started the show with elegant pants-suits and dresses that could sell in any fashion store?

"I love Moschino, because of his sense of humor, the wit and because the clothes are very commercial," said Ellin Salzman, fashion director of Saks Fifth Avenue.

Once Moschino had proved Salzman's point that he makes regular clothes, the fun started with a burst of 1960s psychedelia. Outsize prints in wild colors were used as accents of pattern on a trim cream suit. Models with weeping willow hair and patchwork crochet bra dresses present-ed a surreal send-up of the hippies.

Moschino also flashed up on film his favorite tessage: "Fashion is full of chic." He is full of fun. A red-and-white check tablecloth print jacket peeled off to reveal a black dress with a frilly id's apron. Flower pots appliqued as pockets and a black jacket with a giant playing card on its back were some of his jokes.

The fashion world, and especially tasteful Milan, needs Moschino.

Vacant 'Los Alamos' Unveiled by Berlin Opera

By James Helme Sutcliffe

B ERLIN — "Los Alamos," the first opera by the American composer and pianist Marc Neikrog, has been given its world premiere in West Berlin, commissioned and performed by the Deutsche Oper. The company's general manager, Götz Friedrich, has established an "opera bridge" with the United States, enabling many young singers and composers from America to have a hearing on the Berlin stage.

The Neikrug opera was four years in the making and during this period the composer lived with the Pueblo Indians in the village of Santa Clara to learn about their social structure and way of life, their beliefs and tradi- tions. He also interviewed prominent nuclear physicists and did research in the laboratories of Los Alamos, New Mexico, where the first atomic bomb was tested, in order to tell the story of his opera with the voice of anthenticity.

Each of the opera's three acts takes place about 800 years apart in the New Mexico desert. The first shows the plight of Anasazi Indians after 30 years of drought, about 1100 A.D. They are ready to be persuaded by the iconoclast Coyote that a blood sacrifice - of the leader's daughter Morning Star - will provide an answer to their problems. Eagle warns them (in his animal form, a fascinating the evening worthwhile, more so than the Arnold Schoenberg. He quotes Berg's saxo- critic and musician.

Fear is all that binds and sustains them, but they rebel against this slavery to technology and the loss of contact with other forms of life. The central "brain" is demolished by Coyote, acting out the same negative role in his future reincarnation, and new forms of life appear against a glowing new world set in a spangle of stars.

Neikrug has fitted his opera out with seemingly interminably slow tempos, persis-tent cushions of sound over which the singers declaim in long, sustained tones. Much of the text remains unintelligible, however, because the composer has not learned to thin out his orchestral accompaniment when his characters have something important to say.

But there was no question about the superiority of the performance at the premiere Saturday, conducted by Arturo Tamayo, with William Dooley as the uribal leader Eagle, the Australian coloratura soprano Angela Denning as Morning Star, and the German actor Wolfgang Trautwein in the role of the troublemaker Coyote. The house was a quarter empty before the performance began, unusual for an opening night, and the number of empty seats seemed to grow after each of the two long intermissions. If only because the production itself is so spectacular. "Los Alamos" will remain in the repertoire for the rest of the season.

Klaus Barbie

Barbie Documentary

F IFTEEN months after Klaus Barbie, the former Gestapo chief I in Lyon, was convicted of crimes against humanity, Marcel Ophuls's film on the Nazi war criminal's life has opened in Europe.

The film tries to follow as much as possible - with that arid and bleak form of talking-head documentary — show-business rules," Ophuls told James M. Markham, The New York Times correspondent in Paris. "I'm not a journalist, I'm not a historian — I'm an homme du spectacle.

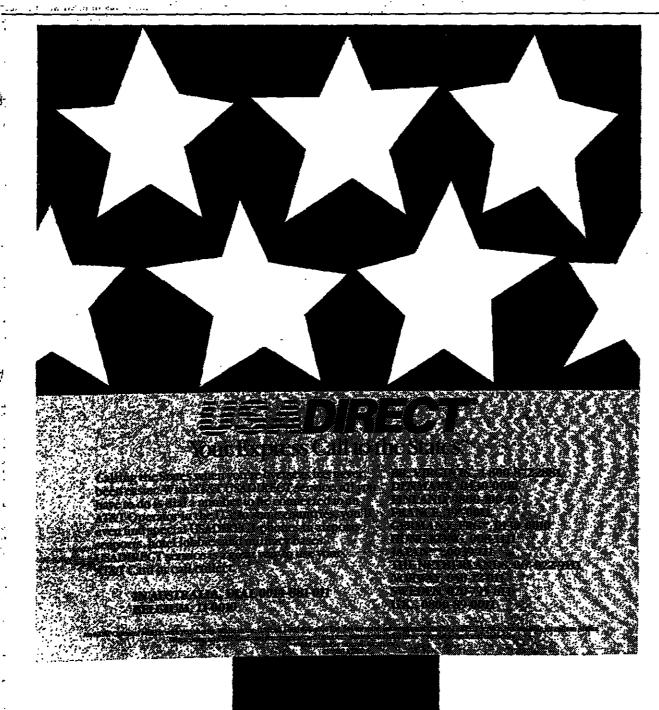

The film opened last week in France and is scheduled for release this week in New York and next month in Britain.

Ophuls, renowned for his direction 20 years ago of "The Sorrow and the Pity," detailing French collaboration with the Nazis, recalled in a interview that his earlier film was a political event when it came out. It proved embarrassing and painful for the French in reopening wounds and a shattering of well-nurtured Gaullist myths about a nation that had resisted the Nazis.

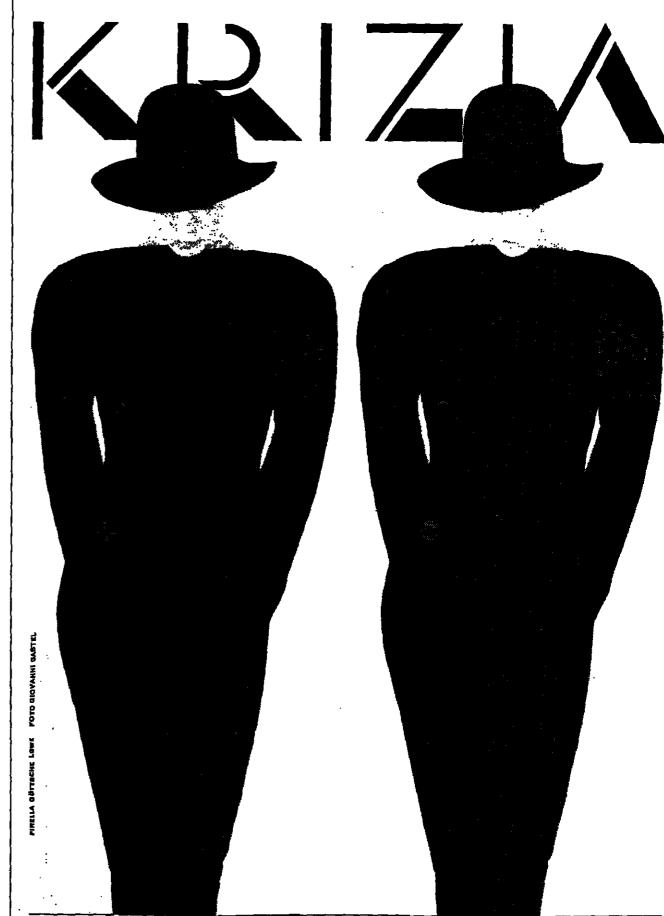

Ophuls's "Hotel Terminus: Klaus Barbie, His Life and Times," evolved into something far different than the director originally planned. Barbie was arrested in 1983 and extradited to France from Bolivia. The setting for the film was to have been Lyon at the time of the Gestapo chief's trial, with flashbacks to his chilling career as a torturer and nemesis of the French resistance during the war, tipster for U.S. counterintelligence in postwar Germany and, later, a shady businessman and security adviser to South American dictators. But because the trial was delayed again and again, the plan was derailed.

Instead of concentrating on the legal proceedings, the film became a roughly chronological, 4-hour-27-minute unraveling of the German's depredations and wanderings that spans decades and continents, embracing the Nazi's enormous crimes in Lyon but recalling more banal ones elsewhere along a sprawling innerary.

NYSE Recoups its Early Losses

Limited Press International NEW YORK — Stock prices closed lower Monday in slow trading on the New York Stock Exchange, but managed to escape substantial Cosses on the strength of a late round of buying.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which rose 22.23 points last week, fell 7.65 to close at 2.105.26. The index fell more than 25 points in late morning activity and was down more than 17 points with less than an hour to the close.

Declines topped advances by a more than 9-5 ratio. Volume slowed to 130.38 million shares, compared with 175.75 million traded Friday.

Broad market indexes also retreated. The New York Stock Exchange index fell 0.34 to 153.23. Standard & Poor's 500-stock index dropped 0.53 to 271.38. The price of an average share lost 7 cents. "The market did not look very good going out Friday," said Ricky Harrington, chief technical analyst with Interstate Securities Corp. in Charlotte, North Carolina.

"In each of the last seven quarters we have seen an abrupt change in the market in the first few sessions of a new quarter." Mr. Harrington The institutions are so dominant in this market, when a quarter ends they can quickly become net sellers or net buyers. Mr. Harrington said the weakness in the technology sector "continues to be a problem for this market as it has been for the last three months. In addition, the market's inability to break through to new highs in the face of falling oil prices must be seen as a negative.

INTERNATIONAL STOCK MARKETS

Bourses Up in 2d Quarter, Off in 3d, and Vice Versa

By JONATHAN FUERBRINGER

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Stock markets outside the United States, on the whole, declined in the third quarter of this year, but many of those that were down from April through June rebounded in the past three months. On the other hand, a downward trend befell many of the secondquarter winners.

West Germany, Italy, and Austria all had bursts of growth in the third quarter, according to the foreign stock market indexes compiled by Morgan Stanley & Co. In the same vein, the markets in Canada, Singapore, Malaysia and Hong Kong slipped after good gains in the first half of the year. The U.S. index also declined by 1.5 percent.

The Japanese market, which declined in the second quarter, was flat in the third quarter and analysis are now recommending dramatically. The major consistent market was Britain, which was down in both quarters, burt by a rise in interest rates and the deterioration in the British trade deficit. New Zealand, the worst performer of 1987, continned on a similar course in the third quarter.

Overall, the world index, denominated in dollars, declined 1.1 percent in the third quarter a 1.4 percent drop in the second. The strong 10.3 percent spurt in the first quarter of the year left the index for the first nine months up 8.3 percent.

For American investors, the rising strength of the dollar this summer continued to eat into foreign stock market gains. In the third quarter measured in local currencies, the world index was third quarter, measured in local currencies, the world index was down only 0.2 percent. For the year so far, the world index in local currencies is up 16 percent, compared with the 8.3 percent in In West Germany, the market rose 5.8 percent in the third quarter after a 3.1 percent decline in the previous three months, using the dollar-denominated index. In Deutsche marks, the market was up 9.5 percent. At the same time, the index for France rose a slight 1.6 percent, after a strong 16.6 percent climb in the second quarter. In francs, the index was up 5.7 percent. NE EQUITY STRATEGIST, Danielle Kadeyan, a vice president of Salomon Brothers Inc. in London, said that the new, third-quarter interest in Germany drained some investors from France. She also said that after the elections in France, investors paused until they got a better sense of how the new government would act.

In West Germany, the stronger dollar helped spur foreign interest and the outlook for the capital goods sector turned out to be much better than expected, said Richard A. Gray, vice president and head of international sales for UBS Securities. In Japan, the braking of a second quarter decline of 7.3 percent reflected a growing confidence in the country's economy, after a slump in the second quarter, and less worry about inflation.

The Hong Kong market was down 6.7 percent in the dollar-denominated index after rising by the same figure, 6.7 percent, in the second quarter. The Singapore and Malaysia markets, which share most of the same listings, fell 7.2 percent after a strong 17.5 percent April-June climb.

Australia, after strong market rallies in the first and second quarter, was flat in the third quarter. In Canada, the market fell 6.5 percent, after a rise of 5.4 percent. In both cases, the decline in base metals stocks, after strong performances in the first six months of the year, accounted for the turnaround, according to Tyrrell Young of UBS Securities.

economy has been the manufacturing sector, which has boosted exports as the cheaper dollar has made the price of U.S. goods more attractive in foreign markets.

Although many countries around the world can learn from the German example,

U.S. officials worry that Germany's export growth will make it harder for the United States to recapture markets and reduce its trade deficit. This could help push the dollar down and upset the world's financial markets, as it did last October.

Meanwhile, French, British and other European officials complain that their trade deficits are soaring, mainly due to a trade imbalance with Germany. This has caused several European nations to seek to slow their economic growth so they absorb fewer German imports, and it is also causing many economists to say the mark will have to be revalued upward against other European currencies.

The West German success in exporting is especially impressive since it is a relatively small country and has few natural resources. Its success seems all the more surprising since German executives often complain that Germany's business climate is uncompetitive because of high taxes, high wages, strong unions and strict govemment regulations.

All this means that German companies must be doing something right on the ex-port front. They have adopted a manufac-turing and marketing approach that many other countries can learn from:

German manufacturers put huge emhasis on quality and service. As a result, their customers are often willing to pay a sizable premium because they are eager to have German quality, be it in luxury cars or German manufacturers train most employees for three and a half years in a much-admired apprenticeship program. This has made West Germany's worker productivity one of the highest in the world, and it enables German companies to best the competition even though wages are among the highest in the world.

German companies see export sales as essential, not as a luxury. "American com-panies are used to producing mainly for their huge home market and only when demand is too low do they try to sell their products abroad." said Wolfgang Brühl, chief economist at Hoechst AG, the German chemical and pharmaceutical giant.

United States or other European countries. With the mark soaring against the dollar, German companies, like those in Japan, are often willing to cut profit margins to hold onto market share as they work to cut costs to push their profits back up. For American observers, a huge enigma about Germany's economy is why its exports did not plunge after the dollar plum-meted to less than 1.90 DM from 3.3 DM in 1985. One answer is that 75 percent of Germany's exports go to Europe and only about 6 percent to the United States. In addition, since Germany's inflation rate is lower than most of Europe's, German products are growing cheaper relative to the European competition. The dollar's recent upward bounce from See MODEL, Page 15

U.S. Reports Orders Rose At Factories

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON — A big jump n demand for motor vehicles and aircraft sent factory orders up 3.1 percent in August, but construction spending languished as it has for most of the year, the Commerce Department reported Monday.

New orders for manufactured goods, especially aircraft, in August increased to a seasonally adjusted $226.6 billion, up 3.1 percent from July's revised figure of $219.9 oillion, the department's Census Bureau said.

Excluding the volatile defense sector, new orders for all factory goods rose 2.7 percent in August after slipping 0.6 percent in July and rising 2.9 percent in June.

Japanese Have Yen for Hollywood Studios Welcome Their Cash and Hands-Off Attitude

By Richard W. Stevenson

New York Times Service
LOS ANGELES — Flush with cash and eager to learn about the entertainment industry, Japanese investors are showing an interest in Hollywood.

Some of Japan's largest companies have been financing feature films, including last spring's "Bright Lights, Big City," starring Michael J. Fox, and the current "Betrayed," with Debra Winger.

A number of Japanese corporations and man

A number of Japanese corporations and partnerships are expected to buy stock in major motion picture and television studios or perhaps to buy a studio outright.

Sony Corp., which is widely rumored to be interested in such an acquisition, has started its own division to produce and distribute Americanmade movies. Sony already has a major presence in the American entertainment business through its $2 billion purchase of CBS Records last year.

The Japanese companies see leisure-time activi-ties as among the healthiest industries in the world. They think that the worldwide appetite for feature films and television programming is rising steadily and that the dominance of American companies is still largely unchallenged. From Hollywood's perspective, the Japanese have arrived on the scene at just the right time. Wall Street, burned by the collapse of several aggressive entertainment companies in the past several years, has grown increasingly wary of the industry, making film financing more uncertain. The appearance of Japanese companies with seemingly limitless cash has excited those who peddle scripts and seek financing.

"We can't handle all the interest," said Pamela

Landesberg, a spokesman for Sony's film opera-tion in New York. "We've got a conference room full of scripts," Hollywood has always welcomed newcomers willing to finance its version of artistic vision, and the Japanese for the most part have been the kind of investors the film industry likes most: passive, with no managerial or creative input.

But some industry executives think that American entertainment companies should be prepared in the long run to have their new Japanese partners and compentors exert a major influence on their "If you look back 10 years from now at the impact of the Japanese on the motion picture

There are precise parallels in the Detroit of the mid-70s and the Hollywood of the mid-80s," said Mr. Puttnam, a frequent critic of the Hollywood establishment. "They both see themselves as the center of the world and invulnerable to challenge." He said the Japanese influence could strengthen the film industry by reducing that insularity and challenging entrenched ways of doing business.

Saudis Warn of Higher Output week ago without taking immediate steps to curb excessive output by

Oil Price Skids;

ABU DHABI — Saudi Arabia, warning of a possible repetition of the 1986 oil market collapse, when prices plunged by about 50 percent. said Monday that it will not permit other oil producers to cut into its market share. Analysis interpreted the statement as a sign the Saudis are intent on boosting output to drive down prices and pressure other producers margins. The statement came as oil prices tumbled amid disarray among members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

The Saudi cabinet statement, distributed by the state-run press agency, said that the world's thirdlargest oil producer would abide by its OPEC-assigned production ceiling only if "all other members returned to their allocated quotas and pledged to maintain them."

North Sea Brent, the most widely traded international crude oil, was traded at fresh 25-month lows in London. Cargoes for lifting in De-cember traded as low as $11.62 per barrel, the lowest since August 4, 1986. Brent closed at $11.68 a barrel, down from $12.03 on Friday.

In the past two years, it held unsuccessful merger talks with the Belgian national carrier, Sabena, then tried to buy a minority stake in British Caledonian only to be outbid by British Airways PLC.

Taiwan Alters Stock Tax After Prices Plunge

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches

TAIPEI — Giving into pressure that sent stock prices in Taiwan down by 9 percent in four trading sessions, the government on Monday said it has modified an unpopular plan to tax profits on equity transactions by raising the threshold above which the levy is to apply.

Finance Minister Shirley Kuo said the new tax, to take effect Jan. 1, would be imposed on profits on sales of shares exceeding 10 million Taiwan dollars ($349,650) each year. She had previously proposed a ceiling of 3 million Taiwan dollars.

A ministry spokesman said Ms. Kuo also wan dollars.

A ministry spokesman said Ms. Kuo also agreed at a meeting with parliamentary members of the ruling Nationalist party to lower a stock transaction tax to 0.15 percent from 0.3 percent, also effective Jan. 1.

Stock prices plunged in Taiwan starting last Thursday. The decline was sparked by Ms. Kuo's announcement of the tax on the previous Saturday. After a four-day closure during an autumn festival, the market index fell from a record high of 8,789,58 to 7,990,75 on Monday, when it lost 215,68 points. when it lost 215.68 points.

But trading volume rose substantially in the Monday session, to 8.68 billion Taiwan dollars, up from Saturday's dismal 132 million.

The decision to modify the tax followed protests by hundreds of investors calling for the resignation of Ms. Kuo and of Prime Minister Yu Kuo-hwa. It also drew fire from Nationalist members of parliament, some of whom are directors of local brokerages. After the modification was announced, legislators who had threatened to invoke the constitution to forestall the tax agreed to draw a region calling for stall the tax agreed to drop a motion calling for its postponement.

Brokers expressed a cautious attitude about the near-term effect of the announcement on the market. John Engles of Ting Kong Securities said selling pressure remained strong. He said he expected the market will continue its decline to the 7,500 mark, before a possible turnaround. Before the tax announcement, the market index had gained more than 6,000 points this year, rising from 2,341 on Jan. 5, the first day of trading.

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court rejected on Monday a challenge to the hankruptcy reorganization of Manville Corp., the asbescy reorganization of Manville Corp., the aspestos manufacturer.

The appeal had been made by MacArthur Co., a company that distributed asbestos made by Manville, which contended that the bank-ruptcy proceedings would unfairly deny it adequate financial protection.

Manville filed a bankruptcy petition in 1982 designed to protect it assainst potential liability designed to protect it against potential liability of more than $2 billion in suits by victims of asbestos-related injuries.

2 Officials of EC Criticize Thatcher

BRUSSELS — Two members of the European Commission criticized Prime Minister Margare Thatcher of Britain on Monday finher reservations about greater West European unity. Lord Cockfield of Britain and Peter Sutherland of Incland, 2 of the 17 commissioners on the EC's executive body, used speeches in Zurich and Berlin lo attack Mrs. Thatcher.

"Those who oppose the abolition of the internal frontiers and the frontier controls will impoverish Europe and impoverish themselves, said Lord Cockfield in Zurich. He is the architect of the EC's campaign to create a giant barrier-free market by the end of 1992. Lord Cockfield carned Mrs. Thatcher's displeasure with plans to bring indirect taxes into line in the community, and he is being replaced in Brussels when his

Scottish Bank Teams Up With Spanish Unit

LONDON — Royal Bank of Scotland Group PLC said Monday that it planned a series of joint ventures with Banco Santander of Spain in a deal that would cost it £79.37 million ($134.2 million).

The deal will allow the banks to hold equity stakes of up to 2.5 percent in each other, while Royal Bank will acquire 50 percent of Santander's West German and Belgian subsidiaries, CC-Bank and Crédit du Nord Belge.

Royal said it would acquire 0.5 percent of Banco Santander, Spain's fourth-largest bank, and would take three options, each valid for five years, to acquire a total of 1.5 percent of Santander.

Ultimately, Santander will hold 5 percent of Royal Bank's capital, as enlarged by a stock sue in part payment for stakes in the Santander units. This includes a 2.5 percent stake acquired by Santander from the Kuwait Investment Office, reducing Kuwait's stake in Royal Bank to 11.9 percent.

Bouygues Shares Ease on Disclosure of Maxwell Buying

PARIS - Word that the British media magnate Robert Maxwell was behind recent buying of the stock of Bonygues SA, the giant French construction concern, has cooled a feverish gain in its shares.

The stock, up 44 percent last week on speculation of a takeover bid, eased 2.4 percent in trading Monday on the Paris Bourse to close at 600 francs ($93.82) a share.

Brokers said the buying of Bouygues stock by Mr. Maxwell diminished prospects for a bid.

Mr. Maxwell told the International Herald Tribune in an interview last week that he had hought nearly 5 percent of Bouygnes stock to fend off an unwanted takeover bid for the private French television channel TF1. Bouygnes holds 25 percent of TF1. Mr. Max-well, part of an original consortium of buyers when the station was denationalized, has pushed his stake up to 13 percent.

Corinne Bouygues, daughter of the group's founder and chairman, Francis Bouygues, 65, said the firm had no need of help to control its Three or 4 percent of the shares won't change the company's future," she said. Mr. Maxwell, chairman of Maxwell Communication Corp., said his stake purchase was purely a defensive move.

Miss Bouygues said, "Whatever might be the friendly relations existing between Francis Bouygues and Robert Maxwell, this operation was done on the latter's own initiative. Francis Bouygues only learned of this after the fact."

Stock traders said French sensitivity about foreign ownership of the media dictated that authorities would not allow Mr. Maxwell to gain control of Bouygues and thus of TF1. Bouygues calls itself the world's biggest construction company. It reported profit last year of 495 million francs on revenue of 53.4 billion francs. It employs 50,000 workers. Mr. Maxwell, in the middle of a pitched battle for the American publisher Macmillan Inc., raised his offer Friday to $90.25, 20 cents above a bid from Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts &

MGM-UA said that it consid ered the deal fair and that it looked forward to expanding its relation-ship with CST. But Mr. Nagayama said any new deal would have to be on different terms

"We didn't know enough," he aid. "This is a first experience. When we try our next deal, the structure must be changed. We want to continue our investment with MGM-UA or other major studios who can offer us better terms."

LVMH REPORTS FIRST HALF RESULTS

At its Shareholders Meeting here today, LVMH Moët Hennessy Louis Vuitton announced record results for the six months ended June 30, 1988.

Consolidated net sales grew by 29% to FF 6,910 million in the period. Net income for the first half amounted to FF 634 million, an increase of 44.5% over the comparable 1987 period. By segment of activity, net sales and income from operations before financial items

+ 29.0% 1,610 In the Champagne & wines segment, sales increased by 8.9%; however, as previously announced, income from operations continued to be affected by the high grape prices of the 1984 and 1985 harvests. In the Cognac & spirits segment, the dramatic increase in sales and income from operations primarily reflects strong growth in the Far East as well as increased sales of higher-margin

Results of the wines & spirits business for the first six months of 1988 reflects the contribution of the joint-ventures established with Guinness in the second half of 1987. Excluding results of these joint-ventures, income from operations in the Cognac & spirits segment would have risen by 43% over last year's first half.

The Luggage, leather goods & accessories activity was marked by a considerable increase in worldwide sales of Louis Vuitton products, with particularly strong growth in Southeast Asia and November 1. Lower 1. Lower 1. In addition, Lower 1. International has completed its restructuring and should consider the product of a whole and should reach breakeven for the year as a whole. In the Perfumes & beauty products segment, Parfums Christian Dior and Parfums Givenchy showed particularly satisfactory growth. Fahrenheit, a new Parfums Christian Dior fragrance for men launched in Europe in early September 1988 has been very well received.

Commenting on the Group's anticipated 1988 results, Mr. Alain Chevalier, Chairman of the Board of Directors of LVMH, noted that "taking into account the changes in the Company's wines & spirits business previously mentioned, growth in net income for 1988 as a whole should exceed 30%".

LONDON - The Kuwaiti state investment arm disclosed Monday that it had built up a 5; percent stake in one of the Big Four British commercial banks, Midland Bank PLC.

The Kuwait Investment Office said in a statement that it owned 5.1 percent of the bank. A Midland spokesman said the agency had been building up the stake during the course of the

"We knew it was increasing its stake and we feel comfortable with it," he said, "But we didn't know it was close to or above 5 percent." British rules require that a shareholding must be disclosed if it reaches that level.

Midland Bank shares fell to 414.5 pence at the close on the London Stock Exchange, in line with the market's decline, from 421 pence on Friday.

Triday.

The Kuwaiti agency had for several years held 2 to 3 percent of Midland, the fourth-biggest British commercial bank. The group is Midland's third-biggest shareholder after the Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp., with 14.9 percent, and British-based Hanson PLC.

The Kuwait Investment Office caused a stir in Britain earlier this year with purchases of the stock of British Petroleum Co., in which it now Its investments worldwide are estimated by

Ministry officials autibuted the increase to interest payments on foreign bonds. They added that they did not think the Bank of Japan had intervened to buy dollars during the month, since the yea-dol-lar rate was stable. The dollar moved between 132.95 year and 136.75 yen in September

MODEL: West German Companies Provide an Example as 1992 Nears

1.58 DM last December has also helped keep German exports from falling, allowing German manufacturers to catch their breath as they rush to cut costs.

Another explanation comes from Wolf-Dieter Deggap, managing di-rector of sales for Tranh AG, a machinery maker based in a Stuttgart suburb. "The decline of the dollar has affected our business, but not nearly as much as everyone expected," he said. "At higher prices, customers still appreciate German technology and quality."

Mr. Deggau's medium-sized company, with $150 million in revenue last year, is typical of many German exporters. Even though Tranb is not huge, it is as export-minded as any American or German multinational giant. Selling goods in 80 countries, it exports almost 40 percent of its production. Mr. Deggan said one of the reasons for his company's success in exporting is the recognition that price is just one of many factors. German business has long received high marks on those other factors: quality, prompt delivery, after-

ANYTHING FOR BILLY

By Larry McMurtry. 382, pages. $18.95. Simon & Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N. Y. 10020.

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

I N his Pulitzer Prize-winning novel "Lonesome Dove" (1985), Larry McMurtry reinvented, even as he torpedoed, many of America's essential fronter myths. His rambling, homespun account of a trail drive provided us with a Dickensian gallery of characters, and by chronicling their mishaps and their dreams, it gave us a wonderfully immediate picture of the it gave us a wonderfully immediate picture of the it gave us a wonderfully immediate picture of the it gave us a wonderfully immediate picture of the it gave us and the picture of the it gave us and the picture of the item of the picture of the item of the picture derfully immediate picture of the rough-and-tumble West of the 1870s.

Having leaped a century ahead in his previous novel Texasville", McMurry returns, in "Anything for Bil-"to the historical past of "Lonesome Dove." This time, however, his hero is not a fictional creation, but the famous outlaw known as Billy the Kid — "the wandering boy," "young Galahad," the "white star of the West, whose dust is now one with the billions and billions of particles that compose that ancient plain."

A lifetime resident of that strange no-man's land halfway between history and legend, Billy lends himself perfectly to McMurtry's interest in myth making. As seen through the eyes of McMurtry's narrator — a dimenovel writer by the name of Ben Sippy — Billy energes as a tragicomic figure, by turns funny, touching and altogether appalling. He's a naive, amoral kid, blase about gunning down men and children in cold blood, but frightened of thunder and lightning.

There is a vulnerability and lostness to him that inspires paternal protectiveness on the part of his male pals and sexual solicitude on the part of women. Like so many of McMurtry's heroes, he is also given to sudden bouts of sadness. In Sippy's view, Billy is as much a victim of history as a maker of it. A nearly incompetent marksman, he apparently blundered into notoriety, watched his reputation swell on gossip and exaggeration, then fought to live up to the legend, leaving in his wake a growing pile of bodies.

"Anything for Billy" is constantly reminding the reader of the disparity between the mythic West of pulp fiction and the considerably less romantic reality of dayto-day life on the frontier. Sippy, a wealthy Philadelphian who has written such dime-novels as "Sandycraw in Comanche Land" and "Mutes of the Mesa; or, the Sheepherder's Remorse," has become so enamored of the adventures he has created that he leaves his wife and nine daughters to try his hand at robbing trains, but quickly slams up against the grubby facts of life in the

Eventually, in the wake of Billy's death, Sippy returns home to Philadelphia, and tries to make the move from pulp fiction to serious literature. Presumably the account that we are reading is his attempt to turn his unsuccessful dime-novel "Billy the Kid; or, The Wandering Boy's Doom" into highbrow art. Thanks to McMurtry's fluent storytelling powers, "Anything for Billy" succeeds in providing the pleasures of both forms.

CHESS

THE 55th Soviet championship ended in Moscow in August with a tie for first place between the world champion, Gary Kasparov, and his perpetual challenger, Anatoly Karpov. The two giants of the chess world opped an impressive field with identical 111/2-51/2 scores. The fast-rising Valery Saloy and Artur Yusupov shared third place with 10-7. Kasparov has never better shown off his extraordinary skill in mating combinations than in his game with I. Smirin.

The anti-King's Indian system with 9 Nd2 that Kasparov used with White was what he had to face with the black pieces in the 17th game of his title match with Karpov last October in Seville, Spain. Instead of 10...Nd7. Smirin would have done well to copy Kasparov's play in bracing the queenside against attack by 10...c5.

Of course, Smirin wanted to attack the white king with 13....14 and 15 ... g5, but Kasparov's queenside attack was speeded by the positional pawn sacrifice, 16 c5!, which could not be accepted without weakening the black pawn position.

Smirin could not protect his d pawn by 20...Qc7 because 21 Qb3 (threatening 22 Ne5!) 21...Kh8 22 Rfc1 Qb8 23 Kh1 g4 24 Nab6! Nb6 25 Bd6 Qb7 26 Ne5 yields White three pawns plus enormous positional advantage for the sacrificed knight. So, he had to pull back the king knight with 20...Ne8.

Kasparov gave himself space to de-fend his king with 21 g4! — he could resume his queenside attack at his leisure. After 21...fg 22 hg g4, it would have given Black counterchances to play 23 f4? ef 24 gf and allow 24...Qb4. Smirin could have obtained sim-plification by 24...Rf3 25 Rf3 Bg4, but after 26 Rb4, followed by 26 Be3, Black would remain under pressure.

Kasparov's 31 Qf1! was a pawn sacrifice with deeply thought-out at-tacking plans. After 31...Bb5 32 Rb5 Ra4 33 Bg2 h6 34 Bh4, it would have been wrong to play 34.. Na7? 35 Rb3 b5 because 36 Ne3 would fatally threaten 37 Ng4 or 37 Nf5.

Smirin hoped to get safely out of the pin of the queen bishop with 34... Qe8, but Kasparov struck at once with 35 Bf6!, the beginning of an incredible attack. After 35... Rf6 36 Rf6 Qb5, it certainly looked as though the champion would have to take perpetual check beginning with 37 Rf8. But then he produced his beautiful key to the problem-like position — 37

Re6! To gobble the piece now with 37_Rc4? would permit 38 Qf7!, leaving Black without a defense to the threat of 39 Re8 Kh7 40 Qf5 mate. On 37...Kg8, Kasparov produced another beautifully lethal blow — 38 Bh3! and after Ro4 the crowning glory — 39 Rh6! The penalty for winning the white queen with 39...Qc5 40 Kh1! Rcl was to be 41 Be6 mate.

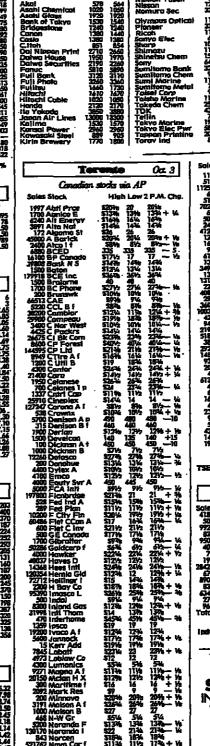

Position after 38 . . . Re4

Smirin had to chop the offered rook with 39_Bh6, but almost immediately, after 41 Qf6, he observed that 41 Kh7 42 Qf7 Bg7 43 Bf5 Kh8 44 Qh5 Kg8 45 Be6 brings about 45 Kf8. 46 Qf7 mate. Smirin gave up.

Christmas Tradition Ends At Madison Square Garden

NEW YORK — When Carl Braum, Butch van Breda Kolff and Bud Palmer were the 1947 beroes, the New York Knicks defeated the Providence Steamrollers, 89-75, in a game that began a longstanding tradition: the Christmas Day game at Madison Square Garden. With the exception of four seasons, including two when the Knicks were on the road, there was always a Christmas Day game at

The tradition is coming to an end. The Garden will be dark this Christmas Day for the first time since 1960.

The Knicks, it turns out, decided that other teams should have the honor of keeping basketball alive on Christmas Day.

"We've been doing this for a long time," said Al Bianchi, the team's general manager, "and it does interfere with a holiday.
"It's a religious holiday, and aside from the players, the coaches and other people connected with the Knick organization, there are a lot of other people to think about: the guys who have to come in and put the floor down, the ushers and the people who have to clean up the place. They would like to have the day off. "It was our feeling that playing on Christmas Day should be rotated around the league.

"When we made our dates available to the league office, we requested we not play on Christmas. When it comes our turn, we'll play on Christmas again."

The Knicks have won 20 of the 37 Christmas Day games. The Los Angeles Lakers, the defending National Basketball Association champions, will play the Utah Jazz in Salt Lake City in the nationally televised game on Christmas.

Lore has it that the game was devised by an English army officer in India in 1881. What he did was carve champagne corks into balls and use the lids of cigar boxes to bat them over books that divided the dining room table. Only with the use of celluloid did the sound of these newer and lighter balls striking the paddle and then the table lead to the more popular term: Ping-Pong.

Imagine, John Lennon In an Objective Film

By Allan Kozinn New York Times Service

JE were out to create a bal-WE were out to store Lennon, not an idealized vision of St. John of Liverpool," says the director Andrew Solt of his docu-mentary, "Imagine: John Len-

"John Lennon had an edge to him," he says, "and we show that, along with many other facets of his personality that were captured on film over the years. Lately, it has been suggested that we as a generation have been duped that Lennon's life was just one incredible public relations scam. That has become an underlying question. Our film leaves it to the audience to decide who the real John Lennon was."

The Warner Brothers film, which was co-produced by Solt and David L. Wolper (the two also collaborated on "This Is Elvis"), and written by Solt and Sam Egan, took nearly two years, and about $7 million, to make. And it is part of a package that includes a $39.95 book, published by Macmillan, and a soundtrack album from Capitol

Records. While "Imagine" joins a flock of documentaries and films made about the Beatles and Lennon since the songwriter's death in 1980, a number of things set it apart. Most strikingly, it includes previously unseen footage, much of it from a private archive tended by Lennon's widow, Yoko Ono. who supplied most of the 240 hours of film and videotape from which the film was assembled.

Since some of this film captures recording and rehearsal sessions, and because Ono also gave the producers some of her husband's unreleased audio tape, many of the songs on the soundtrack are beard in working versions or nnreleased alternate takes.

Another unusual aspect of the film is that Lennon serves as its narrator. In "This Is Elvis," Wolper and Solt tied together documentary footage with a script read by a Presley sounda-like — an approach that, they admit, was criticized. But because Lennon gave so many interviews on John Lennon - Frank Sinana to journalists who taped them, it was my man - but that I had was possible to have him tell his story himself. That was a decision we made early on," Solt says."We thought that giving a third-person voice to the film would be very heavyhanded, and that in any case having a narrator might grow stale. not be involved and could not And since we were blessed with have a right of approval. In my dozens of hours of interviews including nearly 40 hours taped in the few weeks before his death, during which John looks back over his entire life — letting John speak for himself seemed to us to be the only way to go." Lennon's is not, however, the only perspective offered in the film. There are interviews with Ono and Mimi Smith, the aunt who raised him; his first wife, Cynthia; his sons, Julian and Sean; Elliot Mintz, a friend of the Leamons and now Ono's publicist; May Pang Lennon's girl-friend during his estrangement from Ono in 1973 and 1974; and George Martin, the Beatles' record producer, who also oversaw the mixing of the film's soundtrack

"I don't feel the film is in any way a whitewash," says Ono, who initiated the project, but had no hand in its completion apart from selling the producers the rights to her film and sitting for an interview, "I first had the idea in 1984. Around then, several books about John came out that were pretty trashy, and people had a lot of suggestions — that I leave New York, or sue the authors or write a book of my own. "I didn't want to run away, because I hadn't done anything wrong. The legal route wasn't what I wanted to do. And I thought that if I wrote a book, it would be defensive; and I didn't want to do it that way. So I came up with the idea of doing a documentary film, as a way of counterbalancing all this negative stuff with a look at what John was really about.

Ono approached Wolper in 1986. "I told her two things," the 60-year-old producer recalls. "One was that I'm not an expert sion stations and went to Apple.

made about 400 documentary films, and to be very honest. I wasn't an expert on all those subjects. I'm an expert at making documentaries

18 (4) 2 (2) 4 (8) 77 (42.04.1.) 2. 1777.7.

The second thing was that if I were to make the film, she could experience, when you give someone an approval, the film never gets done. I had been told that Yoko could be difficult, but she immediately agreed. She said, You're right. I thought about do-ing it myself, but I could never be objective. That's why I called you. I need someone I can't push around.

Walper took the project to Salt, who had tried unsuccessfully to get a Lennon documentary off the ground a few years earlier, and who had made contact with Lennon in 1978, when he tried to enlist Lennon as the host of his "Heroes of Rock and Roll," a televised rock documentary. Unlike Wolper, Solt, who is 40, grew up during the Beatles era and knew the subject well. He also had an idea of how much footage there was and was aware that Lennon was rumored to have filmed or recorded virtually everything he did after 1970. But neither Wolper nor Solt was prepared for the size of the film cache One shipped to their studies.

"It was absolutely mind-bogging," says Wolper, whose previous documentaries include "The Making of the President: 1960,"
"The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich" and a 78-program televi-sion series called "Biography." "I would say there is more personal footage on John Lennon than on any other famous person who ever lived. There may be more footage on John F. Kennedy. But it's not footage of Kennedy in bed or talking to his wife."

Where Ono's archive was less complete was in the public side of Lennon's life, particularly during the Beatles period. For this mate rial, Solt searched the files of American and European televi-

Yoko Ono and John Lennon on their wedding day in 1969.

Even at that, there were audio and video items Solt knew existed but could not find. For instance, there was a complete version of the Chicago press conference in which Lennon explained his com-ment about the Beatles being bigger than Jesus Christ. So one of his assistants, Julian Ludwig, approached collectors, who provided Ludwig not only with the footage they had, but with leads to other collectors. Once this trove was assembled, Solt, Wolper and Egan watched it all and then scrapped the original biographical outline. Instead, they focused on the raw footage from a film the Lennons made to accompany the 1971 "Imagine" album.

"The footage filmed at Titten-hurst, John's house in England, captures a very important mo-ment in his life," Solt explained, "an instant when everything was the company that controls the Beatles film archive. in balance. He was happily mar-ried to Yoko. The Beatles had ried to Yoko. The Beatles had broken up, and he was feeling good about the response to his 'Plastic Ono Band' album. He had installed a recording studio in his home. And he was creating 'Imagine.' He was living a self-contained, creative life. That period became the center of our film. " For Lennon fans, the film and its spinoffs come as the latest entries in what is a hot market. "The Lost Lennon Tapes," a radio se-ries syndicated by Westwood One, drawing on Ono's archive of interviews and unreleased audio tapes, has been running weekly since January and was planned to last a year. There is also a new book out by Lennon's half-sister, Julia Baird, describing his background in greater detail than has been reported before. And there is the discredited but briskly-selling biography by Albert Goldman, "The Lives of John Lennon."

U.K. Religious Group Upset by Miller Book

W.H. Allen, the British publisher, of "Opus Pistorum," a 1940 Boyale by the American writer Head Miller, faces possible prosecution after complaints about the book's explicit sexuality. The director of public prosecutions said the investigation was prompted by complaints, including one from Christian Action Research and Education, an evengelical charge that promotes traditional family values. The book surfaced three years after Miller's death in 1980 and has sold 60,000 copies in the past four years.

Carol Burnett, who was invited to Moscow to share her experiences as the Soviet government seemen fight alcoholism, said that a phone hotline session taught her the disease makes no distinction between people. Burnett, daughter, of two alcoholics, and her daughter, Carrie Hamilton, who strugged with drug addiction, talked fathere hours to Soviet citizens with phoned in.

Soviet space officials have promised John Denver a chance to fly in their space program in Decen 1989, making a seven-day visit in their space station Mir, he said. "They told me I would have to make up my mind by Nov. 1, yea or nay, on whether I would pay them $10 million for my training and housing and other needs for the trip $10 million for my train into space." Denver told the Honston Chronicle.
